TASTING NOTES

47 refers to the number of botanicals in this unique gin from the Black Forrest in Germany, as well as the fact it is bottled at a healthy 47%. This gin is undoubtedly complex, very aromatic and rich in flavour.

This gin's origins trace to southern Germany's Black Forest region, where it is still made today. Following World War II, a British commander in the Royal Air Force (Monty Collins) was living in Berlin and sponsoring an egret monkey while helping with the rebuild of Berlin Zoo. He later moved to the Black Forest and, finding an abundance of juniper, pure water and herbs, developed his gin recipe. It was unearthed years later alongside a bottle labelled 'Max the Monkey – Schwarzwald Dry Gin'. The '47' refers to the number of plant ingredients used in the gin's distillation.

drinksbiz Magazine
"An array of 47 botanicals go into this gin, which has its origins in southern Germany's Black Forest region. Aromas of freshly crushed forest floor herbs sit alongside the juniper. On the palate there are herbaceous flavours with rounded warmth from the spices."
