TASTING NOTES

Taking fine New Zealand wine overseas, to share with family or friends, is a bit fraught these days. The security rules on liquids mean you can no longer carry a couple of bottles in your hand luggage (unless you buy it in duty free where it's usually expensive and the choice limited). But pack it in your check-in luggage and you travel in fear of arriving to find your clothes stained a tasteful red colour.

Happily, there is an alternative in the form of the US-invented Wineskin, a vinyl bubble-wrap container which both protects the bottle against impacts and is sealed so nothing leaks out if it breaks.

What's even better is these are now reusable so you use them to bring bottles back on return!
